Setayesh Shafiei was only 20 years old.

She was an orphan, which made the identification of her body even more difficult.

On Thursday, 8 January 2026, Setayesh went to the streets of Tehran to stand against the Islamic Republic.

Before leaving, she wrote her final message on Telegram:

“They might cut the internet. I love you all.”

She was shot directly by security forces and killed. Setayesh was young, brave, and full of hope.

Her life was taken. Her voice must remain.

Rebin Moradi, a 17-year-old from Salas-e Babajani in Kermanshah who was living in Tehran, was a school student with hopes for a normal, safe future. On 8 January 2026, during the nationwide uprising against the Islamic Republic, Rebin joined the streets like thousands of other young people demanding freedom and dignity. He was shot from behind at close range by security forces. The bullet entered his back, struck his heart, and exited his body. For four days, his family had no information about his fate. They later found his body at the Kahrizak Forensic Medicine Center. On 14 January, a man identified as Rebin's father was interviewed by state television among the families of the dead. Through tears, he said: "They shot him from a close distance."

Amir Shakouri, from Lahijan, was killed on Thursday, 8 January 2026, during protests in Lahijan, northern Iran.

According to reports, plainclothes armed officers opened fire on protesters and killed this Gilaki citizen, who had joined the demonstrations peacefully demanding freedom and dignity.

Due to internet shutdowns and severe information suppression, no further details are currently available, another deliberate tactic used to silence victims and their families.

His life was stolen, but his voice must not be erased.
